Having been advised of the significance of the oath, of the right to refuse to testify for the reasons set out in Article 104 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and of the criminal liability for making false declarations, pursuant to Article 140 of the Criminal Code, the witness testified as follows:

With regard to the matter at hand I can provide the following information: On 18 November 1943, ten Poles were executed at Młynarska Street in Kielce, at the spot where a chapel now stands. One of them was my husband, Antoni Rogala, who had been arrested by the Gestapo six weeks before the execution. I don't know why he was arrested and I don't know the surnames of the Gestapo men who took him. All the executed people had been incarcerated at the prison in Kielce, but I cannot say whether they all came from Kielce. The execution was carried out by the Gestapo, but I don't know any surnames. After the execution, the Gestapo left the corpses at the site, whereupon some civilians buried the bodies there. After the liberation, the bodies were exhumed and transferred to the Cemetery for War Heroes and Nazi Victims.

At this point the report was concluded, read out and signed.
